"He Made a Journey Abroad…" Continued from Page 6

be nailed down before the collection can be truly opened for use by students and advanced researchers, especially as it might relate to specific academic disciplines, programs or curricula. My impression is that the project is moving along the right lines; discussions should continue with the technical people to create a single portal that will withstand a great deal of traffic (i.e. not crash and cause frustration). Once this is accomplished, and a secure and quiet space provided for researchers, the collection will be poised for its next leap forward. At the same time, the collection will see more electronic traffic, in the form of email requests, especially for electronic scans of the wealth of material from the visual archive. The knotty questions of copyright and permissions will need to be dealt with. My impression was that the staff and volunteers are already working on these matters. It will be good to have policies and procedures in place to deal with these requests. I would be happy to advise on the process that we might have, and to have our digital collections people talk with the Portsmouth team, if that would be helpful.

Finally, there is the question of long-term space. I think it will be very important for the collection to find a single space provided for researchers, the collection and controlled collection space will garner even greater attention for the Doyle/Green collection and quite possibly pull in other related collections, thus enhancing the cultural depth of the city and its existing collections.

Well, as you can tell from my extended discussions, it was a good lunch and an excellent way to conclude the week in Portsmouth. I invited Neil to our 2010 Holmes conference and will be in contact with additional details and information as the planning unfolds. Again, I can’t express my thanks enough for the kindness and support Stephen, Claire, Michael, Neil and others showed me during my visit. This was a week to remember, cherish, and build upon. I couldn’t possibly fit everything into my visit and hope very much to come back with (my wife) to spend more time enjoying the city, its culture and rich history.

That’s just a thumbnail expression of my week. It was a very engaging and informative time exploring the collections and getting to know some of the staff connected with the project. There is much to be proud of. I want to reiterate here how very impressed I was with how much work has been accomplished in such a short time and how the extensive use of volunteers has made this possible, guided by the project staff. Close to fifty percent of the archive has been entered into CALM, most of the books appear to have been cataloged on Spydus, and museum content entered into MODES.

Let me also encourage you to explore all the informative web pages created by the Portsmouth City Council for its museums. They are a great resource for anyone planning a visit to this rewarding south coast city.

My week ended with a final gift from Claire: a concert by the Bournemouth Symphony Orchestra. It was an unexpected treat and the perfect way to bring my visit to a close. I found Claire at the end of the concert and thanked her again for a wonderful week. I am looking forward to our continued communication and collaboration. I told her, in parting, that we will welcome a visit from her, whenever that might be possible.

The final leg of my trip was spent back in London. But that account will have to wait for another time. Tim Johnson

"He Made a Journey Abroad…” By Timothy Johnson

Last year I submitted a proposal to the Friends of the Libraries Awards Committee for a staff development grant in support of a proposed research trip to England for the purpose of a) doing research in the newly opened Richard Lancelyn Green Conan Doyle Collection in Portsmouth, b) consulting with the research and technical staff who are processing the Green/Doyle collections, c) making personal contacts and developing relationships with members of the staff at Portsmouth that would facilitate further collaborations and future cooperative projects, and d) visiting sites connected with Conan Doyle’s life and work. After my proposal was accepted and study grant received, I made contact with the Portsmouth staff as well as Catherine Cooke and Andrew Lyceen in London and developed my itinerary. Everything fell into place and on February 24th I flew to London. My trip lasted sixteen days. What follows is a brief summary of what turned out to be a wonderful and productive trip. (For those readers who are interested, a fuller “travelogue” of my trip may be found on my blog at http://umbookworm.blogspot.com.)

I arrived in London on Ash Wednesday. I wanted to accomplish at least two activities during the first four days of my journey: to meet with Catherine Cooke and view the Doyle Collection at the Marylebone Library, and to meet a former colleague, Kimberly Kowal, who now works at the British Library. I began at the Library where Kimberly provided a tour, and I sat in on a meeting with other staff from the rare books and map collections concerning the use of digital technology and collection security. Following the meeting Kimberly took me to see the Conservation Centre and other parts of the library. After my time at the British Library (the first of a few visits) I wandered around Euston Road to Marylebone Road and my meeting with Catherine, paying my respects at the Sherlock Holmes statue and Baker Street along the way. Catherine gave me a wonderful tour, opening cabinet after cabinet to reveal interesting volumes. We had a chance to talk a little shop and I’m hoping we can offer some of the duplicates from our collections to the Marylebone collection. It would be wonderful, as well, to explore the contents of all those file cabinets to see what didn’t get included in the DeWaal.

The final leg of my trip was spent back in London. But that account will have to wait for another time. Tim Johnson

For any inquiries contact: Timothy J. Johnson, Curator
612-624-3552 or johns076@tc.umn.edu

Sherlock Holmes Collections
Suite 111, Elmer L. Andersen Library
University of Minnesota
222 21st Ave. S.
Minneapolis, MN 55455
Telephone: 612-624-3168
FAX: 612-624-3525

Mailing list corrections requested—Because of the high cost of returned newsletters, we would appreciate being informed of changes of address or other corrections.

Timothy J. Johnson, Curator

Contents

100 Years Ago
2
50 Years Ago
3
From the President
4
Musings
4 Acquisitions
4
Using the Collections
4
An Update From
The Collections
3
Remembrances
8

In Memory Of
Marlene Aig
Robert Carver
Paul Churchill
Cameron Holleyer
E. W. McDauid
Walzer Pond

From
Bruce Aikin
Ben and Sue Vizoskie
Bruce Aikin
Julie McKuras
Nancy Pond
Robin Ernest Dunbar, born March 13, 1868 in South Bend, Indiana, was the youngest son of the eight children of Alvin S., a prominent South Bend attorney, and Mahala Hoover Dunbar. Robin went to school in South Bend. South Bend and the Men Who Have Made IE: Historical, Descriptive, Biographical, published in 1901, describes Dunbar’s background:

After one year’s attendance at Cook Academy, at Havana, New York, he took a four-years’ course in the Literary Department of the University of Michigan, and graduated with the degree of B. A. in 1890. In pursuing his law studies he attended De Pauw University, the University of Michigan, and graduated at Notre Dame in 1891. He was admitted to the bar during this year and commenced the practice of law with his father, under the firm name of Dunbar & Dunbar. This association continued until 1897, when the death of Mr. Alvin S. Dunbar occurred, and since that time Mr. R. E. Dunbar has managed the business. He is a lawyer of general practice, but devotes his time to probate practices, in the settlement of estates and management of guardianship. He is a careful and conscientious attorney, well grounded in the law, and enjoys the confidence and esteem of the community.

Dunbar was the cooled Elder of the local Lodge of Elks, and a member of the Odd Fellows and the Commercial-Athletic Club. He married Blanche Sturtevant on July 24, 1899 in South Bend, and they had five children. According to the December 7, 1913 Indianapolis Star, Blanche, then Blanche Dunbar paid $500 for a smoke Persian cat, and two years later won seven prizes for her cats in Chicago’s South Shore Club fair show.

The civic-minded attorney and family man had political interests. In 1908, he was an Indiana delegate to the Socialist Party of America Convention, held May 10-17 in Chicago, Illinois. One of the Illinois делегатов of the convention, which led to the nomination of Eugene V. Debs as the Socialist candidate for President, was Charles Hope Kerr. Kerr, the son of abolitionists, founded the International Socialist Review, which featured radical theory by the well-known labor movement philosophers, an Inner Circle member and advocates for higher wages and shorter hours, and strikers of misdeeds. The men would come from the government, money from the owners and the taxpayers, and mur- ders from Holmes and his assistant, the aply named labor spy Harry Rottenlie. The mine owners left the murders to Holmes, as they only cared about the murders of everyday occurrence that are passed by without a word of pro- test from the people, such as killing employees, customers, passengers and children. The succeeding chapters are a discussion of socialism involving philosophers, an Inner Circle member and a visiting British scholar.

Robin Dunbar died on February 23, 1946 in Los Angeles after a short illness. He is buried at Bowman Cemetery in South Bend, Indiana along with his wife Blanche, who died in 1966. The Kerr Company, which brought Dunbar to the attention of Sherlockians, remains in business as “not only a living link with the most vital radical traditions of the past, but also an organic part of today’s struggles for peace and justice in an eco- logically balanced world.”

The Friends of the Sherlock Holmes Collections is a quarterly newsletter published by the Friends of the Sherlock Holmes Collections, which promotes the activities, interests and needs of the Special Collections and Rare Books Department, University of Minnesota libraries.

References:
South Bend and the Men Who Have Made It: Historical, Descriptive, Biographical published in 1901.
The Detective Business by Robin E. Dunbar was published 100 years ago today. In the February gh, 1908 The District Messenger Roger Johnson wrote it was “believed to be the first book of mainly non-fiction writings about Holmes.” Because the book had been described in such distinctive terms, I thought I would be able to find numerous articles about the book and the author. I was wrong.

Ronald DeWaal’s The Universal Sherlock Holmes lists only the 1909 volume with no additional commentary on the book. The book had been described in such distinctive terms, I thought I would be able to find numerous articles about the book and the author. I was wrong.

The University of Minnesota is an Equal Opportunity Educator and Employer.

The Detective Business by Robin E. Dunbar was published 100 years ago today. In the February gh, 1908 The District Messenger Roger Johnson wrote it was “believed to be the first book of mainly non-fiction writings about Holmes.” Because the book had been described in such distinctive terms, I thought I would be able to find numerous articles about the book and the author. I was wrong. Ronald DeWaal’s The Universal Sherlock Holmes lists only the 1909 volume with no additional commentary on the book. The book had been described in such distinctive terms, I thought I would be able to find numerous articles about the book and the author. I was wrong.

Ronald DeWaal’s The Universal Sherlock Holmes lists only the 1909 volume with no additional commentary on the book. The book had been described in such distinctive terms, I thought I would be able to find numerous articles about the book and the author. I was wrong.

The University of Minnesota is an Equal Opportunity Educator and Employer.

The Detective Business by Robin E. Dunbar was published 100 years ago today. In the February gh, 1908 The District Messenger Roger Johnson wrote it was “believed to be the first book of mainly non-fiction writings about Holmes.” Because the book had been described in such distinctive terms, I thought I would be able to find numerous articles about the book and the author. I was wrong.

Ronald DeWaal’s The Universal Sherlock Holmes lists only the 1909 volume with no additional commentary on the book. The book had been described in such distinctive terms, I thought I would be able to find numerous articles about the book and the author. I was wrong.

The University of Minnesota is an Equal Opportunity Educator and Employer.

The Detective Business by Robin E. Dunbar was published 100 years ago today. In the February gh, 1908 The District Messenger Roger Johnson wrote it was “believed to be the first book of mainly non-fiction writings about Holmes.” Because the book had been described in such distinctive terms, I thought I would be able to find numerous articles about the book and the author. I was wrong.

Ronald DeWaal’s The Universal Sherlock Holmes lists only the 1909 volume with no additional commentary on the book. The book had been described in such distinctive terms, I thought I would be able to find numerous articles about the book and the author. I was wrong.

The University of Minnesota is an Equal Opportunity Educator and Employer.

The Detective Business by Robin E. Dunbar was published 100 years ago today. In the February gh, 1908 The District Messenger Roger Johnson wrote it was “believed to be the first book of mainly non-fiction writings about Holmes.” Because the book had been described in such distinctive terms, I thought I would be able to find numerous articles about the book and the author. I was wrong.

Ronald DeWaal’s The Universal Sherlock Holmes lists only the 1909 volume with no additional commentary on the book. The book had been described in such distinctive terms, I thought I would be able to find numerous articles about the book and the author. I was wrong.

The University of Minnesota is an Equal Opportunity Educator and Employer.

The Detective Business by Robin E. Dunbar was published 100 years ago today. In the February gh, 1908 The District Messenger Roger Johnson wrote it was “believed to be the first book of mainly non-fiction writings about Holmes.” Because the book had been described in such distinctive terms, I thought I would be able to find numerous articles about the book and the author. I was wrong.

Ronald DeWaal’s The Universal Sherlock Holmes lists only the 1909 volume with no additional commentary on the book. The book had been described in such distinctive terms, I thought I would be able to find numerous articles about the book and the author. I was wrong.

The University of Minnesota is an Equal Opportunity Educator and Employer.

The Detective Business by Robin E. Dunbar was published 100 years ago today. In the February gh, 1908 The District Messenger Roger Johnson wrote it was “believed to be the first book of mainly non-fiction writings about Holmes.” Because the book had been described in such distinctive terms, I thought I would be able to find numerous articles about the book and the author. I was wrong.

Ronald DeWaal’s The Universal Sherlock Holmes lists only the 1909 volume with no additional commentary on the book. The book had been described in such distinctive terms, I thought I would be able to find numerous articles about the book and the author. I was wrong.

The University of Minnesota is an Equal Opportunity Educator and Employer.

The Detective Business by Robin E. Dunbar was published 100 years ago today. In the February gh, 1908 The District Messenger Roger Johnson wrote it was “believed to be the first book of mainly non-fiction writings about Holmes.” Because the book had been described in such distinctive terms, I thought I would be able to find numerous articles about the book and the author. I was wrong.

Ronald DeWaal’s The Universal Sherlock Holmes lists only the 1909 volume with no additional commentary on the book. The book had been described in such distinctive terms, I thought I would be able to find numerous articles about the book and the author. I was wrong.

The University of Minnesota is an Equal Opportunity Educator and Employer.

The Detective Business by Robin E. Dunbar was published 100 years ago today. In the February gh, 1908 The District Messenger Roger Johnson wrote it was “believed to be the first book of mainly non-fiction writings about Holmes.” Because the book had been described in such distinctive terms, I thought I would be able to find numerous articles about the book and the author. I was wrong.

Ronald DeWaal’s The Universal Sherlock Holmes lists only the 1909 volume with no additional commentary on the book. The book had been described in such distinctive terms, I thought I would be able to find numerous articles about the book and the author. I was wrong.

The University of Minnesota is an Equal Opportunity Educator and Employer.

The Detective Business by Robin E. Dunbar was published 100 years ago today. In the February gh, 1908 The District Messenger Roger Johnson wrote it was “believed to be the first book of mainly non-fiction writings about Holmes.” Because the book had been described in such distinctive terms, I thought I would be able to find numerous articles about the book and the author. I was wrong.

Ronald DeWaal’s The Universal Sherlock Holmes lists only the 1909 volume with no additional commentary on the book. The book had been described in such distinctive terms, I thought I would be able to find numerous articles about the book and the author. I was wrong.

The University of Minnesota is an Equal Opportunity Educator and Employer.

The Detective Business by Robin E. Dunbar was published 100 years ago today. In the February gh, 1908 The District Messenger Roger Johnson wrote it was “believed to be the first book of mainly non-fiction writings about Holmes.” Because the book had been described in such distinctive terms, I thought I would be able to find numerous articles about the book and the author. I was wrong.

Ronald DeWaal’s The Universal Sherlock Holmes lists only the 1909 volume with no additional commentary on the book. The book had been described in such distinctive terms, I thought I would be able to find numerous articles about the book and the author. I was wrong.

The University of Minnesota is an Equal Opportunity Educator and Employer.

The Detective Business by Robin E. Dunbar was published 100 years ago today. In the February gh, 1908 The District Messenger Roger Johnson wrote it was “believed to be the first book of mainly non-fiction writings about Holmes.” Because the book had been described in such distinctive terms, I thought I would be able to find numerous articles about the book and the author. I was wrong.

Ronald DeWaal’s The Universal Sherlock Holmes lists only the 1909 volume with no additional commentary on the book. The book had been described in such distinctive terms, I thought I would be able to find numerous articles about the book and the author. I was wrong.

The University of Minnesota is an Equal Opportunity Educator and Employer.
"He Made a Journey Abroad..." Continued from Page 1

bibliography, but that will have to wait for a later time. Catherine also gave me a peak at the newly received archives of the Sherlock Holmes Society of London. This is a very exciting find for London. It will be very interesting to see what this collection contains. During my visit Catherine presented our collection with a gift to the SHS, a copy of the "Lost World" reading special. This surprise was very much appreciated.

Other adventures awaited me in London, but it was soon time to turn my attention to Portsmouth, the focus of my trip. I traveled there over the weekend and began my week-long work on Monday morning with a meeting with Claire Looney. After introductions, she brought me into the Holmes exhibit and gave me a brief overview. I was then on my own to explore the exhibit and view the displays. The exhibit is very nicely done, with a voiceover by the patron of the collection, Stephen Fry, and some electronic monstrosities that allow for additional display of newly scanned items. I was surprised at the amount of material related to Doyle's spiritualism; I wasn't aware of this depth in Richard's collection. There was also quite a bit related to various movies and manifestations of the Holmes character as portrayed by various actors. After my tour through the exhibit Claire and I sat and talked for the next ninety minutes about any number of topics related to the exhibit, collection, and my own experiences with the Holmes collections in Minnesota. It was a great conversation and opener to the week.

Round about noon Claire offered to take me on a bit of a drive through sections of Portsmouth. It was the perfect way to get a larger sense of the city. But the best was yet to come: a trip to the top of the Spinnaker Tower and an aerial view of the city. Claire then drove me to the Guildhall, site of the green/Doyle archive. For the remainder of that first day I was in the company of Michael Gurney, a fellow working on the collection, and a couple of the eighteen volunteers who contribute valuable time and efforts towards making the collecsystem online catalog at the Portsmouth public library and gained a sense of the book collection (now containing around 6,700 titles) for updating one morning at the City Library sitting in on a meeting with Claire, Michael, Kate Hall (museum curator), and Neil McCaw (archivist and curator to the project) to review items selected by Kate and Michael related to "The Hound of the Baskervilles" for updating one of the cases in the exhibit on display in the museum. Not far from the City Museum, during one of my morning wanderings, I found the site of Conan Doyle's surgery, now occupied by apartments but with a plaque to mark the spot.

My week ended with a lunch meeting with Claire, Neil and Stephen and the chance to share my impressions of Portsmouth and the collection.

• the collection and exhibition are impressive
• the collection's breadth and depth are quite remarkable, especially in the area of spiritualism and movie/television materials
• our two collections complement each other very well
• it is important to keep working on matters of access, especially in providing a single portal for discovery and research
• it would be good to speak to the technical people involved with Spydus to see the possibilities of cross-walks with CALM and MODES

As a Rhodes Scholar at Oxford in 1911, Christopher Morley heard Knox's lectures, "Studies in the Literature of Sherlock Holmes," and enjoyed the company of the British writer, editor, and literary editor of Sherlock Holmes, Sir Arthur Conan Doyle. In 1918 autobiograph A Spiritual Amelioration, Knox writes that part of a Don's function is to make him a gentleman in undergraduate societies. He planned to write two, one on St. Paul for theological societies and one on Sherlock Holmes for learned societies, but found the Sherlock Holmes paper would do for both since it was interpreted as a religious tract. He took the Sherlock Holmes stories as a form of literary art and divided them into eleven characteristic divisions with Greek names. Knox invented a controversy about authenticity of the stories with comments by imaginary German scholars.

In 1959 Evelyn Waugh (1903-1966), the British author best remembered for Brideshead Revisited (1945), published a biography titled The Life of the Right Reverend Ronald Knox: Fellow of Trinity College, Oxford and Prominent Apostle to his Holiness Pope Pius XII. The first American edition published the same year by Little, Brown had the title on the dust cover as Mgr Ronald Knox. Ronald Knox (1888-1957) was the English theologian who started literary scholarship in Sherlockiana. In the introduction of his book Essays in Satire (London: Sheed and Ward, 1920) he writes that "Sherlock Holmes paper was written, I believe in 1911, for the Grapheon Club at Trinity; it has been read to various societies, I suppose, above a score of times, and twice published, in the Blue Book and Blackfriars." For these bibliographers, "Studies in the Literature of Sherlock Holmes" has been published six times. The first was in The Blue Book (Conducted by Oxford Undergraduates) 1, No. 2 (July 1912), 311-132, and reprinted in Edgar Smith's 1958 The Incunabular Sherlock Holmes and James Edward Holroyds 1967 Seventeen Steps to 221B: A Sherlockian Collection by English Writers.

The biography of Ronald Knox by Evelyn Waugh is an interesting story. Before his death, Knox chose Waugh to write his biography: Both men were converts to the Roman Catholic Church, brilliant, from middle-class families, educated at Oxford, were temporary schoolmasters, wrote and enjoyed the company of the British Catholic aristocracy. Knox helped Waugh by proofreading Brideshead Revisited and in 1950 asked him to be his literary executor. Emuscaroma A Chapter in the History of Religion (1950) by Ronald Knox was dedicated to Evelyn Waugh. Waugh dedicated the Knox biography to Katherine Asquith and Daphne Acton. Mgr. Ronald Knox lived first at Lady Astor's Aldeham in Shropshire from 1939 to 1947 and at the Manser's House, Mells, Somerset, the country home of Katherine Asquith (1885-1977), from 1947 until his death in 1957.

Knox tutored British Prime Minister Harold Macmillan (1894-1986, in office 1957-1963) as a young man and the two became close friends at Oxford. Waugh interviewed Macmillan at 10 Downing Street — and to keep confidences — used the pseudonym ‘C’ in the biography. However, British journalist Malcolm Muggeridge revealed the identity of ‘C’ in the New Statesman, embarrassing all concerned.

The biography was controversial with its implication that Cardinal Bourne, Archbishop of Westminster, did not use Knox's talents wisely. The book was nearly condemned by the Roman Catholic Church. Mgr. Barton, the senior censor, confirmed the "hierarchy's displeasure" because it violated the unwritten law that bishops are not criticized in any public way.

In his will, Ronald Knox left the manuscripts and copyrights to Evelyn Waugh and the royalties to the Asquith family. Waugh published Literary Distractions by Ronald Knox in 1958. In Chapter XIV Detective Stories, the nine main rules he first wrote in 1924 were reprinted with comments....
From the President

I

was pleased to attend the Sir Arthur Conan Doyle Sesquicentennial Celebration at Harvard's Houghton Library in May. I enjoyed seeing so many friends and hear our own board members Julie McKuras and John Bergquist participate in the symposium. Tim Johnson was able to renew library connections with Peter Accardo, Tom Horrocks and Neil McGaw. Neil, the academic advisor to the Lancelyn Green Bequest in Portsmouth, and Catharine Cooke from the Marylebone Library both made the trip from England. I can report that a common purpose and collegiality exists among librarians to keep Green the Memory of the Master.

The date has been set for the next Minnesota Conference. July 30 – August 1, 2010 are the dates set for “The Spirit of Sherlock Holmes.” We have every reason to believe that this conference will be as successful and entertaining as our previous symposia, and we hope you’ll plan on attending. For more information, please contact Gary Thaden at gthaden@gmail.com.

I want to thank all the friends who have made material donations this year. I applied the generosity of everyone who helps advance the goal of making The Sherlock Holmes Collections the World Center for the study of Sherlock Holmes. I believe that we will reach our goal of having a E.W. McDermid Curatorship soon. Please consider a donation of money or material.

Richard J. Sveum, MD, BSI

Musings

O

ur June issue owes much to librarians. We open with librarians Tim Johnson’s article about his trip to London and Portsmouth this past February and his meetings with librarians there. Tim also updates us with his report of the “Sir Arthur Conan Doyle: A Sesquicentennial Assessment” symposium as well as new links on the Holmes Collections website. Dick Sveum, who loves reading biographies, has written about Evelyn Waugh’s 1959 biography of Father Ronald Knox as well as providing us with his notes from the president.

It isn’t exaggerating to state that our 100 Years Ago article couldn’t have been written without the able assistance of Monique Howell, Reference Librarian for the Indiana Collection at the Indiana State Library and Stephen Sturgeon, Manuscript Curator and Associate Librarian at Utah State University’s Special Collections and Archives at the Merrill-C xsi. I wanted to learn something about the Robin Dunbar who wrote The Detective Business. I found a Robin Dunbar buried in South Bend, Indiana, and a reference to a letter written by an attorney by that name. Don & Jeanine Hartman and their genealogy work available on www.ancestry.com supplied me with the information that the Robin Dunbar who wrote the Detective Business was the same South Bend attorney who moved to Los Angeles. A call to The Indiana Bar Association led me to The Indiana Supreme Court which led me to the Indiana State Library. Monique Howell was able to supply Dunbar’s obituary, and information about his other writings. Finally, it was Stephen Sturgeon who furnished me with copies of the letters that Robin Dunbar wrote to Jack London about his play “Arthur Sonten.” The stationery and signature on that letter confirms that it was the same South Bend attorney Robin Dunbar who wrote and signed Shaw’s copy of the 1900 The Detective Business.

As ever, contributions of materials continue to arrive, although we’ve covered few of them in this issue because of space constraints. It was a pleasure to give Marino Alvarez a tour of the Collections. Summer has arrived in Minnesota, as will more donations and visitors, and we’ll cover that in the September issue.

Richard J. Sveum, MD, BSI

Acquisitions

B

rian Pugh donated a signed copy of his A Chronology of the life of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle 22nd May 1859 to 7th July 1930. The book was published in 2009.

Using the Collections

N

ashville resident and scholar Marino Alvarez took a tour of the Sherlock Holmes Collections this spring while in Minneapolis on business. As he wrote in a note “It was a highlight of my visit to Minneapolis. At our next meeting I will be sure to share my experience with the members.”

Julie McKuras, ASH, BSI

An Update from the Collections

C
nagulations to Harvard University, the Houghton Library, and the Baker Street Irregulars, on a very informative and delightful symposium and exhibit. The symposium, “Sir Arthur Conan Doyle: A Sesquicentennial Assessment,” was held May 7-9 in Cambridge. Eighteen presentations covered a range of topics. The accompanying exhibit, “Every Wednesday: Sir Arthur Conan Doyle in American Culture” and curated by Peter X. Accardo, Glen Miranker and Dan Posnansky, is on display in the Houghton Library through August 8th. The exhibit contains spectacular items from Harvard’s collections and private collectors and is documented in a handsomely produced catalog written by Peter Accardo. My special thanks to Peter for the presentation of a copy of the catalog for our collections. I was pleased to see Minneapolis well represented among the conference attendees and was especially thankful for the moments of conversation with Peter and his Harvard colleague, Tom Horrocks. Their dedicated work was in ample evidence during the weekend. It was an additional privilege to meet William Stoneman, the Florence Mayer Adams professor of the Study of Sherlock Holmes at Brown University’s Special Collections and Private Collections and Private Collec tors and is documented in a handsomely produced catalog written by Peter Accardo. My special thanks to Peter for the presentation of a copy of the catalog for our collections. I was pleased to see Minneapolis well represented among the conference attendees and was especially thankful for the moments of conversation with Peter and his Harvard colleague, Tom Horrocks. Their dedicated work was in ample evidence during the weekend. It was an additional privilege to meet William Stoneman, the Florence Mayer Adams professor of the Study of Sherlock Holmes at Brown University’s Special Collections and Private Collections. His paper from a symposium was in The Strand. Tim Johnson was able to meet him in Minneapolis and introduce him to the Sherlock Holmes Collections at the BSI Library, during the Thursday afternoon reception. My only regret is that I had to leave before the symposium concluded and was not able to attend the final evening’s dinner. Hats off to Harvard and the BSI!

There are two other items that I want to draw your attention to, both found on the Holmes Collections web site (http://special.lib.umn.edu/vernphan/holmesphet.html)

50 Years Ago…Continued from Page 3

In 1932 Knox wrote a review of H. W. Bells Sherlock Holmes and Dr. Watson: The Chronology of Their Adventures and Thomas Bablensky’s Sherlock Holmes: Fact or Fiction? It was titled “The Mathematics of Mr. Watson” and was published in the November 12th 1932 New Statesman. It was later reprinted in the Baker Street Miscellanea 2.8-11 1975. Knox wrote “The Mystery of Mycroft” for H. W. Bells Baker Street Studies in 1934, and his final contribution to Sherlockian literature was “The Apocryphal Sherlock Holmes: The Adventure of the First Class Carriage,” a pastiche that appeared in The Strand Magazine in 1947.

Waugh notes that thirty years after “Studies in the Literature of Sherlock Holmes” was published it had brought Knox a form of fame which he found tedious. Knox wrote to an editor who asked for a review, “I can’t bear books about Sherlock Holmes. It is so depressing that my one permanent achievement is to have started a bad joke. If I did start it.”

Both Christopher Morley and Ronald Knox died in 1937. Fifty years ago in 1959 the first biography of M. R. James was published. Since then there have been several more written. It is a wonderful achievement, in the joint biography The Knox Brothers (1977) and most recently The Wine of Certitude: A Literary Biography of Ronald Knox (2009) by David Rooney. Knox is gone but not forgotten and is especially remembered by Sherlockian scholars.

Richard J. Sveum, MD, BSI

The first item relates to the opening of the Andersen Library and Hubbs family gift for cataloging of the Holmes Collections. In December 1999 the Indiana public local television station featured the Collections on their “News Night Minnesota” program. Some years later this programming moved off the air but the show’s segments were available on the station’s web site but those web links later disappeared. I’m happy to report that the station has created a new “video vault” with many of its past shows available, including the seven minute Holmes segment. If you haven’t seen this for a while, I’d invite you to take another look.

Finally, I’ve posted a copy of the paper I presented at the Doyle conference in Regina, Saskatchewan last November. I’d be interested in any reader comments. All of this—Harvard, public television, University of Regina—shows that Holmes is alive and well. Many thanks for your continued support! Best wishes and happy reading over the Summer.

Tim Johnson
From the President

I was pleased to attend the Sir Arthur Conan Doyle Sesquicentennial Celebration at Houghton Library in May. I enjoyed seeing so many friends and hear our own board member Julie McKuras and John Bergquist participate in the symposium. Tom Johnson was able to renew library connections with Peter Accardo, Tom Horrocks and Neil McGaw. Neil, the academic advisor to the Lancelyn Green Bequest in Portsmouth, and Catrannie Cooke from the Marylebone Library both made the trip from England. I can report that a common purpose and collegiality exists among librarians to keep Green the Memory of the Master.

The date has been set for the next Minnesota Conference. July 30 – August 1, 2010 are the dates set for “The Spirit of Sherlock Holmes.” We have every reason to believe that this conference will be as successful and entertaining as our previous symposiums, and we hope you’ll plan on attending. For more information, please contact Gary Thaden at gthaden@gmail.com.

I want to thank all the friends who have made material donations this year. I applaud the generosity of everyone who helps advance the goal of making The Sherlock Holmes Collections the World Center for the study of Sherlock Holmes. I believe that we will reach our goal of having a E.W. McDermid Curatorship soon. Please consider a donation of money or material on Richard J. Sveum, MD, BSI

O ur June issue owes much to librarians. We open with librarians Tim Johnson’s article about his trip to London and Portsmouth this past February and his meetings with librarians there. Tim also updates us with his report of the “Sir Arthur Conan Doyle: A Sesquicentennial Assessment” symposium as well as new links on the Holmes Collections website. Dick Sveum, who loves reading biographies, has written about Evelyn Waugh’s 1959 biography of Father Ronald Knox as well as providing us with his notes from the president.

It isn’t exaggerating to state that our 100 Years Ago article couldn’t have been written without the able assistance of Monique Howell, Reference Librarian for the Indiana Collection at the Indiana State Library and Stephen Sturgeon, Manuscript Curator and Associate Librarian at Utah State University’s Special Collections and Archives at the Merrill-Cazier Library. I wanted to learn something about the Robin Dunbar who wrote The Detective Business. I found a Robin Dunbar buried in South Bend, Indiana, and a reference to a letter written by an attorney by that name. Don & Jeannine Hartman and their genealogy work available on www.ancestry.com supplied me with the information that the Robin Dunbar of South Bend was an attorney who moved to Los Angeles. A call to the Indiana Bar Association led me to the Indiana Supreme Court who led me to the Indiana State Library. Monique Howell was able to supply Dunbar’s obituary, and information about his other writings. Finally, it was Stephen Sturgeon who furnished me with copies of the letter that Robin Dunbar wrote to Jack London about his play “Arthur Somnet.” The stationery and signature on that letter confirms that it was the same South Bend attorney Robin Dunbar who wrote and signed Shaw’s copy of the 1900 The Detective Business.

As ever, contributions of materials continue to arrive, although we’ve covered few of them in this issue because of space constraints. It was a pleasure to give Marito Alvarez a tour of the Collections. Summer has arrived in Minnesota, as will more donations and visitors, and we’ll cover that in the September issue.

Richard J. Sveum, MD, BSI

Musings

B rian Pugh donated a signed copy of his A Chronology of the life of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle 22nd May 1859 to 7th July 1930. The book was published in 2009.

Acquisitions

B nashville resident and scholar Marito Alvarez took a tour of the Sherlock Holmes Collections this spring while in Minneapolis on business. As he wrote in a note “It was a highlight of my visit to Minneapolis. At our next meeting, I will be sure to share my experience with the members.”

An Update from the Collections

C ongratulations to Harvard University, the Houghton Library, and the Baker Street Irregulars on a very informative and delightful symposium and exhibit. The symposium, “Sir Arthur Conan Doyle: A Sesquicentennial Assessment,” was held May 7-9 in Cambridge. Eighteen presentations covered a range of topics. The accompanying exhibit, “Ever Westward: Sir Arthur Conan Doyle in American Culture” and curated by Peter X. Accardo, Glen Miranker and Dan Posnansky, is on display in the Houghton Library through August 8th. The exhibit contains spectacular items from Harvard’s collections and private collectors and is documented in a handsomely produced catalog written by Peter Accardo. My special thanks to Peter for the presentation of a copy of the catalogue for our collections. I was pleased to see Minnesota well represented among the conference attendees and was especially thankful for the moments of conversation with Peter and his Harvard colleague, Tom Horrocks. Their dedicated work was in ample evidence during the weekend. It was an additional pleasure to meet William Stoneman, the Florence Fletcher Curator at the Fitch Romance Library, during the Thursday afternoon reception. My only regret is that I had to leave before the symposium concluded and was not able to attend the final evening’s dinner. Hats off to Harvard and the BSI!

There are two other items that I want to draw your attention to, both found on the Sherlock Holmes Collections web site (http://special.lib.umich.edu/holmes.phhtml)

Both Christopher Morley and Ronald Knox died in 1937. Fifty years ago in 1959 the first biography of Msgr. Ronald Knox was published. Since then there have been several more written, including the joint biography The Knox Brothers (1977) and most recently The Wine of Certitude: A Literary Biography of Ronald Knox (2007) by David Rooney. Knox is gone but not forgotten and is especially remembered by Sherlockian scholars.

Richard J. Sveum, MD, BSI

50 Years Ago—Continued from Page 3

In 1932 Knox wrote a review of H.W. Bells Sherlock Holmes and Dr. Watson: The Chronology of Their Adventures and Thomas Babson’s Sherlock Holmes: Fact or Fiction? It was titled “The Mathematics of Mrs. Watson” and was published in the November 12th New Statesman. It was later reprinted in the Baker Street Miscellanea 2.8-11, 1975. Knox wrote “The Mystery of Mycroft” for H.W. Bells Baker Street Studies in 1934, and his final contribution to Sherlockian literature was The Apocryphal Sherlock Holmes. The Adventure of the First Class Carriage,” a pastiche that appeared in The Strand Magazine in 1947.

Waugh notes that thirty years after “Studies in the Literature of Sherlock Holmes” was published it had brought Knox a form of fame which he found tedious. Knox wrote to an editor who asked for a review, “I can’t bear books about Sherlock Holmes. It is so depressing that my one permanent achievement is to have started a bad joke. If I did start it.”

The first item relates to the opening of the Andersen Library and Hubbs family gift for cataloging of the Holmes Collections by December 31, 1999, our local public television station featured the Collections on their “News Night Minnesota” program. Some years later this programming moved off the air, but the show’s segments were available on the station’s web site but those web links later disappeared. I’m happy to report that the station has created a new “video vault” with many of its past shows available, including the seven minute Holmes segment. If you haven’t seen this for a while, I’d invite you to take another look.

Finally, I’ve posted a copy of the paper I presented at the Doyle conference in Regina, Saskatchewan last November. I’d be interested in any reader comments. All of this—Harvard, public television, University of Regina—shows that Holmes is alive and well. Many thanks for your continued support! Best wishes and happy reading over the Summer.

Tim Johnson

Photo by Marino Alvarez

Peter Accardo, Tom Horrocks and Tim Johnson

Julie McKuras, ASH, BSI

Using the Collections

Julie McKuras, ASH, BSI

Photo by Julie McKuras

Tim Johnson

Richard J. Sveum, MD, BSI

Friends of the Sherlock Holmes Collections
browsable, and that will have to wait for a later time. Catherine also gave me a peak at the newly acquired archives of the Sherlock Holmes Collections in London. It will be very interesting to see what this collection contains. During my visit Catherine presented our collection with a gift which was a copy of the London Sunday Times’ “Our World” reading special. This surprise was very much appreciated.

Other adventures awaited me in London, but it was soon time to turn my attention to Portsmouth, the focus of my trip. I traveled there over the weekend and began my week-long work on Monday morning with a meeting with Claire Nooney. After introductions, she brought me into the Holmes exhibit and gave me a brief overview. I was then on my own to explore the exhibit and view the displays. The exhibit is very nicely done, with a complete view of the patron of the collection, Stephen Fry, and some electronic monitors that allow for an additional display of newly scanned items. I was surprised at the amount of material related to Doyle’s spiritualism, I wasn’t aware of this depth in Richard’s collections. There was also quite a bit related to various movies and manifestations of the Holmes character as portrayed by various actors. After my tour through the exhibit Claire and I sat and talked for the next ninety minutes about any number of topics related to the exhibit, collection, and my own experiences with the Holmes collections in Minnesota. It was a great conversation and opened to the week.

Round about noon Claire offered to take me on a bit of a drive through sections of Portsmouth. It was the perfect way to get a larger sense of the city. But the best was yet to come: a trip to the top of the Spinnaker Tower and an aerial view of the city Claire then drove me to the Guildhall, site of the Green/Doyle archive. For the remainder of that first day I was in the company of Michael Gutteridge, an author working on the collection, and a couple of the eighteen volunteers who contribute valuable time and efforts towards making the collection accessible. Michael provided an extensive overview of the archival collection and described the CALM database that is used for entering collection information. In addition, Michael pulled some materials related to my own research (a number of radio scripts) and allowed me additional access to the CALM database (this proved to be of special value in my quest to get a sense of the depth and breadth of the collection as I worked through the week).

As the week progressed I became increasingly impressed with the work accomplished by the staff and volunteers at Portsmouth. On Tuesday I spent the morning in the archives (and with the CALM database). According to Michael there are about 20,000 of the estimated 40,000 items in this portion of the collection described and entered in CALM, so they’re about half way through the descriptive process. I discovered a good representation of material from the Norwegian Explorer and the Friends of the U of MN Libraries. Some of our local Sherlockians appear in the collection: Bergm, Southworth, Seveum, McIgras, M.O, and Blegen to name a few. The types of material are varied: letters, advertisement, photographs, pamphlets, brochures, etc. In the afternoon I traveled with Michael to the Carnegie Library in Fratton Road for a mid-afternoon talk about the Doyle collection and Richard Lancelay Green. His talk is part of the outreach work to make the collection known to the community I enjoyed his talk and the follow-up questions by audience members. In the evening Claire treated me to dinner and the chance to talk more about our collections. I ended the day convinced that the opportunity, using CALM, to search for booklets and pamphlets that may not yet be listed in my Doyle/Holmes bibliography. I explored the new Spydus system online catalog at the Portsmouth public library and gained a sense of the book collection (now containing around 6,700 titles). I spent one morning at the City Library sitting in on a meeting with Claire, Michael, Kate Hall (museum curator), and Neil McCormack (assistant to the projecting the) to review items selected by Kate and Michael related to “The Hound of the Baskervilles” for updating one of the cases in the exhibit on display in the museum. Not far from the City Museum, during one of my morning wanderings, I found the site of Conan Doyle’s surgery, now occupied by apartments but with a plaque to mark the spot.

My week ended with a lunch meeting with Claire, Neil and Stephen and the chance to share my impressions of Portsmouth and the collection.

• the collection and exhibit are impressive

• the collection’s breadth and depth are quite remarkable, especially in the area of spiritualism and movie/television materials

• our two collections complement each other very well

• it is important to keep working on matters of access, especially in providing a single portal for discovery and research

• it would be good to speak to the technical people involved with Spydus to see about the possibilities of cross-walks with CALM and MODES

• the city of Portsmouth has much to be proud of. It is a very interesting combination of old and new. The museums are very interesting and loaded with content.

Part of our conversation at lunch revolved around the academic connection with the collection. Here access is the key. This, and the need for a more controlled study/reading space should on Biblical Higher Criticism. In his 1928 autobiography A Spiritual Autobiography, Knox writes that part of a Don’s function is to ‘discipline’ undergraduates in some societies. He planned to write two, one on St. Paul for theological societies and one on Sherlock Holmes for secular societies, but found the Sherlock Holmes paper would do for both since it was interpreted as a religious tract. He took the Sherlock Holmes stories as a form of literary art and divided them into eleven characteristic divisions with Greek names. Knox invented a controversy about authenticity of the stories with comments by imaginary German scholars.

Sir Arthur Conan Doyle wrote a letter to Knox dated July 5th 1912, which Waugh quotes in his book. “I cannot help writing to tell you of the amusement – and also the amazement – with which I read your article on Sherlock Holmes. That anyone should spend such pains on such matters surprised me. Certainly you know a great deal more about it than I do’ and he continued for four pages to discuss the controversy in detail.” Knox’s paper was the beginning of our cult and scholarship, and Morley brought it to America.

The biography of Ronald Knox by Evelyn Waugh is an interesting story. Before his death, Knox chose Waugh to write his biography. Both men were converted to the Roman Catholic Church, brilliant, from middle-class families, educated at Oxford, were temporary schoolmasters, wrote satire, enjoyed the company of the British Catholic aristocracy. Knox helped Waugh by proofreading Brideshead Revisited and in 1950 asked him to be his literary executor. Emusiasm: A Chapter in the History of Religion (1950) by Ronald Knox was dedicated to Evelyn Waugh. Waugh dedicated the Knox biography to Katherine Asquith and Daphne Action. Mgr. Ronald Knox lived first at Lady Astor’s in Shropshire from 1939 to 1947 and at the Manor House, Mells, Somerset, the country home of Katherine Asquith (1885-1977), from 1947 until his death in 1957.

Knox tutored British Prime Minister Harold Macmillan (1949-1962, in office 1957-1963) as you young man and the two became close friends at Oxford. Waugh interviewed Macmillan at 10 Downing Street – and to keep confidences – used the pseudonym ‘C’ in the biography. However, British journalist Malcolm Muggeridge revealed the identity of ‘C’ in the New Statesman, embarrassing all concerned.

The biography was controversial with its implication that Cardinal Bourne, Archbishop of Westminster, did not use Knox’s talents wisely. The book was nearly condemned by the Roman Catholic Church. Mgr. Barton, the senior censor, confirmed the "Hierarchy’s displeasure" because it violated the unwritten law that bishops are not criticized in any public way.

In his will, Ronald Knox left the manuscripts and copyrights to Evelyn Waugh and the royalties to the Asquith family. Waugh published Literary Diversions by Ronald Knox in 1958. In Chapter XIV Detective Stories, the nine main rules he first wrote in 1924 were reprinted with comments. Knox was a charter member of the Detection Club, founded in 1930, which adopted its rules for their code of ethics. The Detective Club wrote three serial novels, with each member writing a chapter full of clues and passing it on, Ronald Knox contributed all to three. From 1926-1937 he wrote six detective novels to supplement his meager stipend as an Oxford Chaplain.

Continued on page 5

"He Made a Journey Abroad…" Continued from Page 1

Continued on page 8
Robin Ernest Dunbar, born March 13, 1868 in South Bend, Indiana, was the youngest son of the eight children of Alvin S., a prominent South Bend attorney, and Mahala Hoover Dunbar. Robin went to school in South Bend. South Bend and the Men Who Have Made It: Historical, Descriptive, Biographical, published in 1901, describes Dunbar's background:

After one year's attendance at Cook Academy, at Havana, New York, he took a four years' course in the Literary Department of the University of Michigan, and graduated with the degree of B. A. in 1800. In pursuance of law studies he attended DePau University, the University of Michigan, and graduated at Notre Dame in 1891. He was admitted to the bar during this year and commenced the practice of law with his father, under the firm name of Dunbar & Dunbar. This association continued until 1897, when the death of Mr. Alvin S. Dunbar occurred, and since that time Mr. R. E. Dunbar has managed the business. He is a lawyer of general practice, but devotes his time to probate practices, in the settlement of estates and management of guardianship. He is a careful and conscientious attorney, well grounded in the law, and enjoys the confidence and esteem of the community.

Dunbar was the exalted Ruler of the local Lodge of Elks, and a member of the Odd Fellows and the Commercial-Athletic Club. He married Blanche Stone on July 24, 1890 in South Bend, and they had five children. According to the December 7, 1913 Indianapolis Star, Eleanore Blanche Dunbar paid $500 for a smoke Persian cat, and two years later won seven prizes for her cats in Chicago's South Shore Club fair show.

The civic-minded attorney and family man had political interests. In 1908, he was an Indiana delegate to the Socialist Party of America Convention, held May 10-17 in Chicago, Illinois. One of the Illinois делегаты at the convention, which led to the nomination of Eugene V. Debs as the Socialist candidate for President, was Charles Hope Kerr.

Kerr, the son of abolitionists, founded Charles H. Kerr and Co. in 1886 to promote the writings of Karl Marx, John Hay, and Marxists. The company was “the world’s leading English-language radical publisher” (http://www.charleshkerr.org) publishing works by writers such as Karl Marx, Clarence Darrow, Carl Sandburg, Jack London, animal rights crusader J. Howard Moore, Eugene V. Debs, “Mother” Jones, and Upton Sinclair. Kerr also published the International Socialist Review which featured radical theory by the well-known labor movement figures, including Jack London, a Socialist Labor Party member since 1896.

In 1909, Kerr published Robin Dunbar’s The Detective Business. Dunbar described detection as a hunt, and that “The man-hunt idea explains also the success of the detective story of the Old Sherlockian style.” From the socialist perspective, the detective’s goal to become rich can be realized if he sells protection, “to thief, burglar, bank robber, gold brick man or Bank Association.” Dunbar focused on the potential proceeds for detectives who thwarted “the loss of profits occasioned by the demands of the unions, strikers and labor agitators.” For this, the public must be against the strikers, and that requires labor support.

Homes is a tool of management, which controls the press, professors, courts, and legislators, and feels no crime is too great to prevent.

100 Years Ago...Continued from Page 2

had it if keeps wages down and profits up in the book. mine owners called it “the great Sherlock Holmes” to end the strike of the miners of the old valley for higher wages and shorter hours, and bust the union. Jon Lelberg noted the story “transcended parody into pro-paganda.”

Holmes required “Men, Money and Murder” in order to safely accuse the strikers of misdeeds. The men would come from the government, money from the owners and the taxpayers, and murders from Holmes and his assistant, the spied named labor spy Harry Rottenlette. The mine owners left the murders to Holmes, as they only committed “easy murders of everyday occurrence that are passed by without a word of protest from the people; such as killing employees, customers, passengers and children.” The succeeding chapters are a discussion of socialism involving philosophers, an inner circle member and a visiting British scholar.

Wikipedia’s page on labor spies refers to the Detective Business. It cites Dunbar’s statement “A spy’s business is to deceive his victim, to gain his confidence, to learn his secrets and plans and then to betray him.” A “deceptive life is the only life for him. He is both Judas and Ananias.” When the sleuth “joins the strikers he is the pretended friend, when he encourages and leads to violence he is the secret enemy.” Not a sympathetic view of the detective business. The “detective business has been transformed from a spasmodic but stirring affair into a cold-blooded but paying system. The modern Sherlock Holmes needs a new biographer.”

In 1913 Dunbar wrote “Arthur Sonten,” a three-act comic play. Published by The Stage Society of South Bend, Indiana. His circular, listing himself as the author of The Detective Business, included his comments as well as local press reviews. His preface noted he wrote papers for the Chicago Daily Socialist, The Wage Slave, The International Socialist Review and The Industrial Worker, Regarding “Arthur Sonten,” The Tribune noted the only interest was it was published by a South Bend man, and the ‘thought is a mixture of worn out atheistic and socialist truisms.” The Saturday Review of Enquirer reviewer wrote that the play would “be roughly received by the critics…Socialists will object to the veiled utterances put into the mouths of their leaders.” On July 23, 1913 Dunbar sent the circular to Jack London, with a letter offering him a presentation copy. The letter and circular are held in the Jack London papers, Utah State University Special Collections and Archives. The following year, his college comedy “On the Wabash” was published by The Stage Society of South Bend.

In 1918, Dunbar and his family moved from South Bend to Los Angeles. Although well-known in South Bend as an attorney, the 1920 Federal Census lists his profession as gardener. The Los Angeles County voter registration lists throughout the 1920s indicate he was a registered Socialist and a solicitor. The 1930 Federal Census, although listing him incorrectly as Robert, not Robin, records his occupation as a solicitor in the upholstery industry.

Robin Dunbar died on February 23, 1946 in Los Angeles after a short illness. He is buried at Bowman Cemetery in South Bend, Indiana along with his wife Blanche, who died in 1906. The Kerr Companies, which brought Dunbar to the attention of Socialists, remains in business as “not only a living link with the most vital radical traditions of the past, but also an organic part of today’s struggles for peace and justice in an ecologically balanced world.” (http://www.charleshkerr.net)

The Primer’s imprint & Copyright Page of The Detective Business stated “the first sketch in this book is reprinted by permission of Collier’s Weekly.” In the notes to his play “Arthur Sonten” Dunbar wrote that he “broke into the columns of ‘Solidarity’ under an alias and into the coffers of ‘Collier’s’ on an alibi.” That alibi will have to be researched another day.

Julie McIlvain, ASL, BSI

References:
South Bend and the Men Who Have Made It: Historical, Descriptive, Biographical. South Bend: Tribune Print Co., 1901. Available at www.sacnecity.com http://www.marxists.org/history/usa/spa/1912/11/24/mao.htm
http://www.encyclopedia.chicagohistory.org/pages/2310.html
http://www.sharkshifter.net

The Friends of the Sherlock Holmes Collections is a quarterly newsletter published by the Friends of the Sherlock Holmes Collections which seek to promote the arts, literature and other Special Collections and Rare Books Department, University of Minnesota Libraries.

Editor: Julie McIlvain
13512 Grand Ave. Apple Valley, MN 55124
mike973@Gmail.com

Editorial Board
John Bergquist, Timothy Johnson, Jon Lelberg, Richard J. System, M.D.

The University of Minnesota is an Equal Opportunity Educator and Employer.

Copyright © 2005
University of Minnesota Library

The Friends of the Sherlock Holmes Collections is a quarterly newsletter published by the Friends of the Sherlock Holmes Collections which seek to promote the arts, literature and other Special Collections and Rare Books Department, University of Minnesota Libraries.
"He Made a Journey Abroad…" Continued from Page 6

be nailed down before the collection can be truly opened for use by students and advanced researchers, especially as it might relate to specific academic disciplines, programs or curricula. My impression is that the project is moving along the right lines; discussions should continue with the technical people to create a single portal that will withstand a great deal of traffic (i.e. not crash and cause frustration). Once this is accomplished, and a secure and quiet space provided for researchers, the collection will be poised for its next leap forward. At the same time, the collection will see more electronic traffic, in the form of email requests, especially for electronic scans of the wealth of material from the visual archive. The knotty questions of copyright and permissions will need to be dealt with. My impression was that the staff and volunteers are already working on these matters. It will be good to have policies and procedures in place to deal with these requests. I would be happy to share information as the planning unfolds.

Finally, there is the question of long-term space. I think it will be very important for the project to find a single physical home for the entire collection, one that provides climate controls and security I understand that such a facility is being considered, and would encourage continued work on this, even in this poor economy. If our own Andersen Library experience is anything to go on, a new building with an attractive user space and controlled collection space will garner even greater attention for the Doyle/Green collection and quite possibly pull in other related collections, thus enhancing the cultural depth of the city and its existing collections.

Well, as you can tell from my extended discussion, it was a good lunch and an excellent way to conclude the week in Portsmouth. I invited Neil to our 2010 Holmes conference and will be in contact with additional details and information as the planning unfolds. Again, I can’t express my thanks enough for the kindness and support Stephen, Claire, Michael, Neil and others showed me during my visit. This was a week to remember, cherish, and build upon. I couldn’t possibly fit everything into my visit but I hope very much to come back (with my wife) to spend more time enjoying the city, its culture and rich history.

That’s just a thumbnail expression of my week. It was a very engaging and informative time exploring the collections and getting to know some of the staff connected with the project. There is much to be proud of. I want to reiterate here how very impressed I was with how much work has been accomplished in such a short time and how the extensive use of volunteers has made this possible, guided by the project staff. Close to fifty percent of the archive has been entered into CALM, most of the books appear to have been cataloged on Spydus, and museum content entered into MODES.

Let me also encourage you to explore all the informative web pages created by the Portsmouth City Council for its museums. They are a great resource for anyone planning a visit to this rewarding south coast city.

My week ended with a final gift from Claire: a concert by the Bournemouth Symphony Orchestra. It was an unexpected treat and the perfect way to bring my visit to a close. I found Claire at the end of the concert and thanked her again for a wonderful week. I am looking forward to our continued communication and collaborations. I told her, in parting, that we will welcome a visit from her, whenever that might be possible.

The final leg of my trip was spent back in London. But that account will have to wait for another time.

Tim Johnson

Remembrances

In supporting the Sherlock Holmes Collections, many donors have made contributions either in honor or in memory of special persons.

In Memory Of

Marlene Alg
Robert Carver
Paul Churchill
Cameron Hollery
E. W. McDermid
Walter Pond

From

Bruce Aikin
Ben and Sue Vizsokie
Bruce Aikin
Julie McKuris
Nancy Pond

For any inquiries contact:
Timothy J. Johnson, Curator
612-624-3552 or johnst97@umn.edu

Sherlock Holmes Collections
Suite 111, Elmer L. Andersen Library
University of Minnesota
222 21st Ave. S.
Minneapolis, MN 55455
Telephone: 612-624-3168 FAX: 612-624-3525

Mailing list corrections requested—Because of the high cost of printed newsletters, we would appreciate being informed of changes of address or other corrections

Timothy J. Johnson, Curator

"He Made a Journey Abroad…"

L ast year I submitted a proposal to the Friends of the Libraries Awards Committee for a staff development grant in support of a proposed research trip to England for the purpose of a) doing research in the newly opened Richard Lancelyn Green Conan Doyle Collection in Portsmouth, b) consulting with the research and technical staff who are processing the Green/Doyle collection; c) making personal contacts and developing relationships with members of the staff at Portsmouth that would facilitate further collaborations and future cooperative projects, and d) visiting sites connected with Conan Doyle’s life and work. After my proposal was accepted and study grant received, I made contact with the Portsmouth staff as well as Catherine Cooke and Andrew Lysecky in London and developed my itinerary. Everything fell into place and on February 24th I flew to London. My trip lasted sixteen days. What follows is a brief summary of what turned out to be a wonderful and productive trip. (For those readers who are interested, a fuller ‘travelogue’ of my trip may be found on my blog at http://tumblebookworm.blogspot.com.)

I arrived in London on Ash Wednesday. I wanted to accomplish at least two activities during the first four days of my journey: to meet with Catherine Cooke and view the Doyle Collection at the Marylebone Library, and to meet a former colleague, Kimberly Kowol, who now works at the British Library. I began at the Library where Kimberly provided a tour, and I sat in on a meeting with other staff from the rare books and map collections concerning the use of digital technology and collection security. Following the meeting Kimberly took me to see the Conservation Centre and other parts of the library. After my time at the British Library (the first of a few visits) I wandered around the Marylebone area and met with Catherine, paying my respects at the Sherlock Holmes statue and Baker Street along the way. Catherine gave me a wonderful tour, opening cabinet after cabinet to reveal interesting volumes. We had a chance to talk a little shop and I’m hoping we can offer some of the duplicates from our collections to the Marylebone collection. It would be wonderful, as well, to explore the contents of all those file cabinets to see what didn’t get included in the DeWaal...